TAKE THAT, ANGRYMAN!

Hello!

How are you all doing?

I'm doing fine. That's about the same for me.

During the time I have finished drawing this two volume series, I've moved to Tokyo. Now I can have even more work! But there's a bar on the first floor of the apartment building across the street. In addition to that, there are bars all around the area. Each place has repercussions on friends and family. That wasn't really the deciding factor on my moving here, but I want everyone to believe me. I also got a call from my father about petty tasks for me to do today. He was like, "What? You're on a break? Are you out drinking everyday?!" I think he thinks I live a certain way. For example, that I go out drinking everyday. I want to tell him I can't help it when I'm your daughter.

Ahh, I'm going out for a drink.

WHAT'S HAPPENING,
HERE?

DID YOU

New Series

I know it's already started, but I hadn't decided on the story until now. It was too risky. So risky that my manager was like, "I'm going to Yamagata tomorrow!"

It took her half a day to come by plane. This series was a wee bit difficult of a delivery, but I'll continue to stay on good terms with her now. I've cheered up from all the people. Thank you so much.

"Take That, Nanamin!" isn't in volume one, it's a short story manga that was published in Dessert Baby. I say the theme of it is a heart throbber! But I was really bummed that I couldn't talk about it at that time. My love life though is quite another matter to the readers. When a close friend of mine returns home for a visit, I tried to draw the incident as it happened.

A week ago

Itaki suddenly came back

give up on
